What Is It? Individuals with ASD are at greater risk for mental health challenges than are their neurotypical peers. These challenges include: anxiety disorders and panic attacks (sometimes called meltdowns); depression and increased risk for suicide; and catatonia. Mental health challenges in ASD are related to sensory differences, high rates of bullying, emotional dysregulation, and the need for predictability, as well as other neurological differences. Effective intervention for these mental health challenges begins with addressing the underlying characteristics of autism.

Financial Disclosure: Ruth Aspy is being paid an honorarium and travel expenses for this presentation.
Non-Financial Disclosure: Ruth Aspy has no relevant nonfinancial relationships.

Outcomes

Participants will be able to:

- recognize the signs that an individual with autism is experiencing depression.
- describe the relationship between sensory differences and anxiety in people with autism.
- discuss catatonia and autism with others in the community.
