EXECUTIVE FUNCTIONING WHEN “ALEXA” CAN DO IT ALL Presented by Paige Buckingham

March 27, 2020.

9:00 AM- 3:00 PM, Registration begins at 8:30 AM

John A Logan College Room F 103

700 Logan College Drive Carterville, Illinois

REGISTER AT: <https://tinyurl.com/u6dk3nf>

DESCRIPTION:

In a time when “Alexa” can set your alarm, remind you to brush your teeth, play a song and even help with homework, is executive functioning still important? YES!! This training will focus on the specific skills that make up executive functioning, how to teach these skills using low and high tech assistive technology, and how to write IEP goals that are focused on skills. We will also have fun along the way learning to teach students to become their own personal assistant.

OUTCOMES

Participants will be able to:

- Identify specific skills that make up executive functioning.
- Share different ways to teach executive functioning skills.
- Write IEP goals focused on skill deficits, not task completion goals.
- Use assistive technology tools (low tech to high tech) to support executive functioning skill development.
